ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Ian Brockwell has been writing for many years and his news articles have been seen by millions.

Although many of the news articles he writes often have a political flavour, his favourite topics have always been those with a mystery attached to them.

This is his third book to be published, his first being a Sci-Fi Novel, but he felt that it would be interesting to explore topics that not only mystify the public, but scientists as well.

When not writing books or articles, Ian spends his time teaching and working on his internet site (www.profindsearch.com). His site is a small Search Engine and was created a few years ago.

Ian was born in England, but has spent a lot of time in other countries, including 16 years in Russia.

INTRODUCTION

Whilst there are many topics that could be considered “unexplained” and worthy of exploration, such a book would take a long time to create and be too large to carry in your pocket. I therefore hope to include some of these other subjects in future books.

The subjects I have covered in this book are the ones that are most familiar to the public and are of personal interest to me as well.

Each category offers an explanation of the subject and provides the views of opposing sides. In many cases I have offered my own opinions and theories, some of which are based on my own experiences.

The purpose of the book is to be informative, but at the same time give the reader an opportunity to consider alternative possibilities, so that they can add these to their own thoughts and maybe discover an answer to the mysteries?

I feel sure that you will find my views on Future Dreams, Ghosts, ESP, Life after Death and Evolution especially interesting and maybe the first time you have come across such explanations.

I hope you enjoy reading this book as much as I enjoyed writing it, and discover new knowledge that will help you to look at the unexplained in a completely different light afterwards.

ASTROLOGY

Astrology has existed for thousands of years and is believed to go as far back as 3000 BC (the Early to Middle Bronze Age) and is a belief that knowledge of the apparent relative positions of celestial bodies can help in understanding, interpreting, and organizing information about personality, human affairs, and other terrestrial matters.

A person involved in Astrology is called an astrologer or an astrologist.

Some often confuse Astrology and Astronomy, and in the past these were almost inseparable. However, around the 18th Century, astronomy became seen more as the scientific study of astronomical objects and phenomena, but without the astrological speculation of these phenomena.

Traditional beliefs in Astrology followed the principle that “events in the heavens are mirrored by those on Earth”. However, more modern astrologists question that and debate whether celestial bodies are the cause of certain events, or merely signs of such an event.

In ancient times leaders put a great deal of faith in astrological forecasts, often consulting an astrologer before making any important decision.

Scientists, as you would expect, have found no proof to support the belief that studying the positions of celestial bodies can help forecast a person's future, and consider astrology a pseudoscience or superstition.

However, be that as it may, many millions of people still believe that it does have a real ability, but maybe the popularity of astrology is based on the potential support it gives us when we are making our own decisions?

Many people often say “I don’t believe in them, it’s just a bit of fun”, but this does not stop them constantly looking at the “horoscopes” found in Newspapers and Journals, hoping to see some news of a “good” event coming their way.

If there is any truth in Astrology, a special reading is more likely to produce the results you seek. However, the information found in tabloid “horoscopes” is aimed at thousands (if not millions) of readers and can not possibly offer any accuracy. These are of course worded in such a way so that the message given will have some meaning to some of the people who read them. For example, if I said the number “5” will be “lucky” to a million readers, there is a good chance that it will be to quite a few of them!

BERMUDA TRIANGLE

The Bermuda Triangle, also known as the Devil's Triangle, has been the source of many mysteries going back to the time of Christopher Columbus (1492), who reported seeing “strange dancing lights on the horizon” and made mention in his log of unusual compass bearings in the area.

Some believe that the “dancing lights” were the cooking fires of Taino natives in their canoes or on the beach, and the unusual compass bearings were nothing more than the result of a false reading based on the movement of a star.

The disappearance of aircraft and other vessels have frequently been attributed to the paranormal, a suspension of the laws of physics, or activity by alien beings.

Whilst many of the disappearances remain unexplained, a good deal of the reports have been found to be inaccurate, or “changed” over a period of time. It has also been discovered that such events can be found in almost any other area of ocean.

Let us look at some of the factual information regarding the “Bermuda Triangle”. It is one of the most heavily-sailed shipping lanes in the world, has a very busy flight route for commercial and private aircraft heading towards Florida, the Caribbean and South America from northern destinations, the Gulf Stream passes through the Triangle (with a current of five to six knots) and is subject to sudden storms (like hurricanes). All of these factors could contribute to the mystery.

One scientific test has proven that the presence of vast fields of methane hydrates on the continental shelves could cause the sinking of a ship when the bubbles decrease the density of the water. “It has been hypothesized that periodic methane eruptions may produce regions of frothy water that are no longer capable of providing adequate buoyancy for ships. If this were the case, such an area forming around a ship could cause it to sink very rapidly and without warning.” However, according to reports, no large releases of gas hydrates are believed to have occurred in the Bermuda Triangle for the past 15,000 years.

One of the most famous incidents connected with the Bermuda Triangle appeared in the film Close Encounters of the Third Kind which suggested the crew of Flight 19 were abducted by aliens. In the film the planes mysteriously reappeared (undamaged and in perfect working order) and the crew were returned later when a large UFO landed and returned them (showing no signs of ageing).

Although this is one of my favourite films, it is not all that accurate, but it was made to be entertaining and not a scientific documentary.

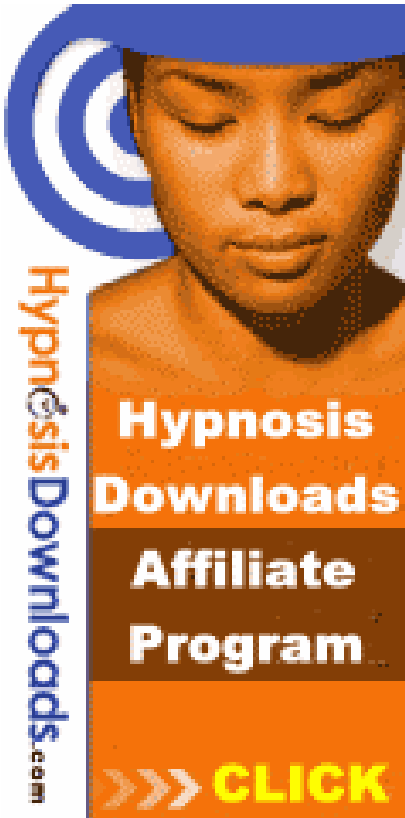

Flight 19 was a training flight of bombers that went missing on December 5, 1945 while over the Atlantic.

Many were led to believe that Flight 19 encountered unusual phenomena and anomalous compass readings, the weather was clear and the flight was supervised by an experienced pilot (Lt. Charles Carroll Taylor). The Navy also put the “loss” down to “causes or reasons unknown”

In reality Lt. Taylor was not familiar with the area and was actually 50 km off course, and had a history of getting lost, allegedly having done so three times during World War II and being forced to ditch his planes twice into the water.

The most well known ship that has been connected to the Triangle is the Mary Celeste, but she was actually “abandoned” off the coast of Portugal (1872). There seems to be some confusion over this incident and the sinking of a ship with a similar name, the Mari Celeste, off the coast of Bermuda on September 13, 1864. However, some of the facts about the Mari Celeste sinking are debated and some have said that the Mari Celeste was a “fictional” ship created by Arthur Conan Doyle and based on the Mary Celeste incident.

Although most of the previously unexplainable “Triangle” mysteries have been solved, a few will remain to leave some doubt in our minds, and of course provide material for future films (and books) on this intriguing subject.
